Reinforcements for India.

In the last two months we have despatched 25,000 soldiers on a voyage of 15,000 miles. This brief but comprehensive observation is not ill-calculated to place the energy and resources of the country in a creditable light before the eyes of the world; but it would be un- M. Sudre, after reading the phrase, pronounced, without wise in the extreme to presume that the actual work before us has been even nearly accomplished. It has been estimated by good authorities that an army of 80,000 British troops in India would suffice for the pacification of the country under any circumstances apparently probable. This is, perhaps, a reasonable assumption, and as this under the orders of Lord Canning. The European troops in India at the commencement of the year numbered altogether, including those in the service of the Company, about 35,000 or 40,000 men.-To these it may be reckoned that 10,000 have been or will be added from the Cape, the Mauritius, Ceylon, and the Chinese Expedition, leaving 30,000 or 35,000 to be fixtures; Wooden and Willow Ware; Brooms; Buckets. TRANSMITTED SIGNALS BY MUSICAL SOUNDS .- The Franc Musicale gives an interesting account of some experiments made in presence of the Emperor of the French when at Plombieres, to test the efficiency of M. Surdre's plan for transmitting signal sounds. The above named journal says: "During the Emperor's stay, M. Surdre, the inventor of what is called telephonie, or the art of transmitting dle of the saloon, he announced that he would, with his violin, expressed any phase his Majesty might please to dictate to him, in such a manner as to enable Mme. Sudre, who was seated at the further end of the room, among a group of ladies, to say what it meant. The Emperor immediately wrote on a piece of paper the words, 'Le premier qui fut roi fut un soldad heureux,' and M. Sudre produced a few sounds from his violin. Mme. Sudre immediately rose and repeated the phrase word for word. Another experiment was then made—it consisted in speaking the notes instead of playing them. The Emperor wrote, Plombaries est une ville charmante ce soir, and any intonation of voice, certain notes. Mme. Sudre at once gave the words correctly. Experiments in telephonie were made. M. Sudre's system reduces the transmission of signals to the three sounds expressed by the trumpet, the drum, or the cannon; or, in the event of high winds preventing sounds the measures which have been actually taken ought to from being heard, to three signs. The Emperor gave result, no doubt, in the concentration of some such force the order, "Construct batteries on the height," and M. Sudre produced three sounds on the height," and M. Suat once repeated the phrase. Another order, given by the banks for this timely action. Gen. Espinasse, was repeated by the drum, and translated instantaneously by the lady. The order, "Let the artillery paralize the fire of the enemy's battery," was transmitted by taps on the table to imitate cannon, and was in like manner at once repeated by Mme. The Daily News of Wednesday says: " Daylight at length dawns, and the crisis seems about o pass away. We heard of no further bank suspensions yesterday, which of itself was a relief. We have also the satisfaction to announce that the city banks held a meeting in the afternoon, at the Clearing House, to discuss the state of affairs and to consider how the banks could best promote the interests of our merchants and recover their lost credit in financial circles. Forty banks were represented. The meeting took place at 3, p. m., and continued till 5. The whole proceedings were of a very business-like and harmonious character. It was unanimously resolved that the parties present should represent to their respective boards of directors to increase their discounts, within a week, three per cent. upon their respective present lines of discount. This will give a relief to the merchaots to the extent of over three millions of dollars. This action of the banks will be received with gladness throughout the trading community, and dre produced three sounds on the clarion; Mme. Sudre In the name of our commercial community we thank

"The severe pressure upon us was owing in part to the sudden contraction of discounts by the banks, doubtless a necessary expedient to protect themselves, but having probably seen the worst of the difficulties, and knowing their own abilities, they show themselves ready to step forward, and, as far as lies in their power, lend a helping hand. But the weekly bank report, published yesterdy the banks show that they are very strong, having a circulation of $7,838,000, and specie on hand amounting to $13,327,000, nearly two dollars in specie for one of cir

We learn also that the Bowery Savings Bank has sent in $1,000,000 certificates of the United States stock to be redeemed. This will, therefore, be paid in the course of the week, and will be so much capital added to the circulation. The skies are indeed looking brighter.

"The feeling in the street was much improved. More confidence was shown, which will soon lead to the re sumption of business by the discount brokers. The stock market has also improved. Exchange with the South is relaxing a little. The currency of the State i more in demand as that of other States is more an more suspected. The low price at which exchange or London is selling—100 to 105—must lead to a large importation of gold in a few weeks. Sales of exchange have actually been made at par, or 100 per cent., which is 4.44 cents per pound sterling. We shall weather the PRICES MUST COME DOWN.—In the Northern cities the produce markets are feeling the money pressure, and the holders of produce of all kinds are satisfied with lower prices. But as all prices are settling at the same time the relatives of exchangerable products will not be much altered by this reduction, so that farmers will really get as much of exchangeable value for their products as they did under high prices. They may get but one dollar for their wheat, but if that dollar purchases as great a supply of groceries or domestic goods as two dollars did during the expansion, they do not lose by the reduction. From the Galveston Civilian.

It is apprehended that the war in India will cut short the supply and greatly enhance the price of this article. It is one of more importance than many persons suppose, although it has ceased to hold the important place which it once did in the products of the United States. The species of Indigo most commonly cultivated in India is, we believe, a native of the tropical regions of America, although there are many varieties of the plant, more or less in favor in different districts. The enterprise, energy and intelligence of the English, aided by the cheap labor of the natives, were the means of rendering the production of this article in the East Indies more profitable than in America, and thus driving the industry of our planters into other channels. Indigo grows best on lands recently cleared, as it remires a good deal of moisture; it also requires protection from high winds, and irrigation in times of drought It needs rain particularly when the young plant has just appeared above the ground. It thrives best, while rowing, in damp, cloudy weather, though sunshine is requisite to develop fully its coloring properties. The cultivation of the plant requires less labor than the gathering and preparation of the crop. The coloring matter s obtained from the leaves. When ready for gathering they assume a dark green color. The branches containing them are then severed from the main stem, the leaves dried in the sun, beaten off, and placed under shelter.— With favorable weather, other branches and leaves put forth, and are treated in a similar manner, until three or four pickings have been secured, when re-planting becomes necessary. The leaves, after drying, are steeped in six times their volume of water; the water, after having extracted the coloring matter from them, is drainferred to, we observe the sub-treasury is paying out ed off, boiled, strained, and allowed to ferment, when, having been sufficiently evaporated, the Indigo is beaten and moulded. The entire process is too nice and tedious

Dr. Leiber attributes the superiority of East India Indigo mainly to the improved process of manufacture oursued in that country, and says that the American which sell at less than half the price, can be made equal to the foreign article with proper care and attention.— In 1829 the American Journal of Science estimated the value of Indigo consumed in the United States at two illions of dollars-the quantity being as many pounds, of which one tenth, or 200,000 lbs, were then of American growth, and worth only 50 cts. per lb., while the oreign was worth from $1 to 1 25. The average prouct of Indigo in South Carolina is said to be 50 pounds per acre, though four times that quantity has some times been produced. British India, for some years, has furnished more than hree quarters of the Indigo of commerce. If that supoly should now entirely be cut off, it is difficult to say how far prices may advance, or what impulse may be given to its cultivation in the southern States. There can be no doubt that Texas is as well calculated for its growth as any other State. There are doubtless some old Carolinians among us who are familiar with its growth and preparation for market.

SCHOONER EL DORADO.-One of the most remarkable facts connected with the loss of the steamer Central America (says the Boston Traveller) is that of an efficient clipper schooner in good order being so near the scene of disaster, and knowing the position where the steamer was when she went down, being unable to find previously effected, it is evident that it will not require a single one of the persons who floated on the fragments the Central America, but kept on her course after having hailed her. Mr. Fletcher was not rescued until between six and seven o'clock the next morning, being the last but two of those picked up. At that time a schooner was in sight at a great distance. Mr. Fletcher thinks t very strange that Capt. Stone, if he remained near the place where the Central America went down, did not discover any of the scores of men who were floating in the water during the night.
